

....From a mama

For the little ones...

A Story-based pre-writing skill development book (For ages 2 & above)

'The first of a planned series'

"I believe the transition from a time of play and less intentional learning to a phase of structured activities and learning for continued growth should be gentle, enjoyable, and driven by the child's full interest. Only then can the process truly benefit the child." - Mabel, Author

What the Book does?

- Story-based tracing and pre-writing activities that feel like play, not “work.”
- Encourages curiosity, creative thinking, and problem-solving through simple, engaging tasks.
- Gently builds fine-motor and early literacy skills (lines, curves, loops, mazes, etc.).
- Works as an aid to help children progress from finger tracing to pencil tracing, step by step.

About the Author and her first Book

Mabel is a mother of a 5-year-old and a food technologist by profession. Over the years of her motherhood, she researched and explored many tools and resources at each stage of her child’s growth, which gradually developed into a deep interest in early childhood development.

During the preschool years and at the stage of kindergarten readiness, she realized that asking her child to simply “copy the pattern” rarely worked. Instead, when activities had a clear reason and purpose, her child showed interest, became curious, and slowly built the skill. This observation grew into the idea for her first book, the first in a planned series designed to support natural development and growing interest in children ages 2 and up, while sparking curiosity, creative thinking, and early cognitive skills.

This book is a delightful blend of story and activities that introduce lines, curves, loops, mazes, and other pre-writing paths, meant to gently aid natural development in the early literacy days of little learners.

Yes, her child is the reason behind Mabel discovering another version of herself. With gratitude and joy, she is now formulating a book series based on her observations and the belief that the child should be the navigator of their journey, while parents, teachers, and other caregivers are there to guide and support.

Trace With Me: Bunny's Pre-Writing Adventure is the first in the series, with each book designed as an aid for a different stage of the child's growth.
